Draw Your Family!

Draw your family below. Then use the fluency lines activity to describe them again and again.

A large rectangular area enclosed by a dashed black line, intended for students to draw their families.

Fluency Lines / Líneas de fluidez

Form two lines facing a partner. Describe your family to your partner using your drawing — name, age, and one adjective for each person ("This is my brother. His name is Luis. He is 12 years old. He is funny."). When the teacher says "Switch!", one line moves down to face a new partner and everyone describes their family again. Repeat 4-5 times — the goal is to say it faster and more smoothly each time, not to say something new.

Numbers Games

Reference for the three numbers activities

Counting Race

Stand in a circle. Going one at a time, count up to a target number with a timer running. Stop the timer once you reach it. Do this 2-3 times and try to beat your time as a group.

Race to Write

Split into two teams, each in a line facing the whiteboard. Give a marker to the front person in each line. Call out a number — they race to write the numeral on the board. Fastest team scores a point. Pass the marker back, that person goes to the end of the line, repeat with the next two people.

What Time Is It, Mr. Fox? (good for kids)

Trainees line up against one wall. One person ("Mr. Fox") stands facing away from the group at the other side of the room. Everyone calls out together: "What time is it, Mr. Fox?" Mr. Fox answers with a number ("It's 3 o'clock!") and everyone takes that many steps toward Mr. Fox. Eventually Mr. Fox answers "MIDNIGHT!" and chases everyone back to the wall. The digital practice tool's "Mr. Fox" tab can call out random numbers (and the occasional midnight) for this game.

Teacher Answer Key & Notes

Keep this page for yourself – not for students

Describing Family (drawing): Students draw their family, then describe each person to a partner using the taught vocabulary and sentence frames. Follow with the Fluency Lines activity (previous page) so they repeat the description several times with different partners, building speed and confidence rather than new content.

Family Tree diagram: Use as a reference chart while teaching the vocabulary — point to a box, students say the word; say a word, students point.

Numbers Games: See the dedicated Numbers Games page for Counting Race, Race to Write, and What Time Is It, Mr. Fox — all reinforce numbers 0-20 through movement rather than worksheets.

Months Chant: Once trainees know the months, play the Macarena song and sing the months of the year to the tune, doing the dance together. A fast, memorable way to drill month order. Song: youtube.com/watch?v=qxa9C2ESdrc (also embedded in the digital practice tool's Months & Birthdays tab).

"Meet My Family!" generator: The digital practice tool has a matching activity that randomly combines a family member, a name, an age, and an adjective into a full introduction ("This is my sister. Her name is Ana. She is 8 years old. She is tall.") — good for repeated oral practice without paper.

Vocabulary Taught
